NEW CHARTER FOR SEYMORE COMPANY

Seymour Woolen Factory Company
Incorporated Fifty Years Ago,
January 27, 1866.

MANY IMPROVEMENTS MADE

Company Hereafter Will be Known as Seymour Woolen Mills—Management is Unchanged.

The Seymour Woolen Factory Company today completes its fiftieth year of business. The charter granted to the corporation on January 27, 1866, expires and tomorrow business will be resumed under a new charter in which the name of the company is given as the Seymour Woolen Mills. The new charter is granted for a period of fifty years. The law requires corporations to make a slight change in the name when the new charter is granted and the management took the opportunity offered to shorten the title. It is announced, however, that the business will be continued under the former management and there will be no changes in the policy of the company.

The Seymour Woolen Mills is one of the oldest manufacturing plants in the city. It was organized October 6, 1865 and the minutes of the first directors' meeting were signed by John Love, Travis Carter and Charles Butler. All of the men instrumental in the organization of this company were prominent in the early life of Seymour and were active in its growth and development. Although the company was organized in October, 1865, it was not formally incorporated until January 27, 1866.

The minutes show that the first officers were:

John Love—President.

Travis Carter—Secretary.

First National Bank—Treasurer.

The company was incorporated for $50,000. In 1866 L. D. Carpenter became connected with the company and served one year as secretary. From 1866 until 1871 the financial affairs of the company were in a precarious condition and the history of the concern during that period cannot be accurately given from the incomplete minutes.

In 1871, however, the late Louis Schneek purchased an interest in the company and was immediately given the management of the plant. Under his direction the company was reorganized and again placed on a solvent basis. The present success of the Seymour Woolen Mills is largely due to the business acumen of the late manager who afterwards gained the controlling interest. After he had placed the business on a paying basis he devoted his attention to a further enlargement of the business at all times looking to the future with keen business insight. Under the management of Mr. Schneek the local company had a remarkable growth and was soon recognized as one of the leading woolen mills in Indiana.

In 1872 A. L. Meyer was elected as secretary and served in that capacity until his death. Mr. Meyer was succeeded by the late John Oestring who served until his death.

Upon the death of Louis Schneek in 1905 the management of the plant was placed under the control of B. F. Schneek who has manifested unusual business ability in looking after the affairs of the plant. Since he has been in control remarkable progress has been made in opening up new channels of trade and in increasing the efficiency of the factory.

At the present time extensive improvements are being made at the plant. Additions are being erected and other changes are being made to take care of the constantly growing business. The new brick weave shed is almost completed and all the looms there will be operated by individual electric motors. A large generator is being installed to supply the power. Improvements are also being made in the dye room and other departments. The exterior of the plant has been made more attractive and the arrangement of the office apartment is second to none in any manufacturing plant in the Middle West.

When the plant was first operated about twelve people were employed. Today the company employs about 150 when the entire factory is running to its capacity. The quality of the woolen products made at the mills is the best to be found in the American market and the stamp of the Seymour Woolen Mills is a sufficient guarantee to dealers that the quality is par excellent. The company was given first award at the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893 and also at the St. Louis Exposition in 1904.

Although the company is entering a period under its second charter there will be no apparent change in the management of the plant. The plans were fully discussed at the annual meeting of the first of this year and the following officers were chosen:

B. F. Schneek—President.
Lynn Faulkner—Vice President.
Charles A. Hemmer—Secretary.

The directors may meet tomorrow and adopt new by-laws under the new charter but the meeting will consider matters of business in a formal way.

The Seymour Woolen Mills are one of the leading industries in this city. Because of its excellent business management it is in continuous operation except when improvements are underway. The payroll of the plant is large and through this channel alone thousands of dollars are placed in circulation each month. With its practically new factory and its reputation for products of the best quality together with its conservative yet aggressive management the future prospects for the company are exceedingly bright and with its success comes a larger prosperity for the entire city.

ANNUAL INSPECTION OF SUCCESS CO. NO. 76, K. OF P.

Knights Show up Well at Review and Plan to Bring Home Prize From National Encampment.

The annual inspection of Success Company No. 76, K. of P., was held last evening in Castle Hall, and was a most enjoyable occasion for the Knights, more than thirty of whom were in line. Lieut. Col. John M. Lewis, Capt. G. G. Graessle, a former captain of the company, and Major T. S. Blish were inspecting officers. Major Claude Carter, of the Seymour battalion, was an honorary guest. Capt. W. L. Johnson has his company in good condition and the men showed up excellently last night, both in the sword manual and in the various formations and drills. Following the inspection there was a luncheon and smoker.

The company is already making plans for the trip to Nashville, Tenn., next summer, where it will participate in the prize drill contests with teams from the entire country at the meeting of the national encampment, and the men confidently expect to bring back some of the prize money to Seymour. Regular drills will be held from now on, and every effort made to get into first class shape for the competition they will have to go against at Nashville.

FOUNDATION FORMS WILL BE CONSTRUCTED SHORTLY

Work at the postoffice site preliminary to the construction of the concrete foundation for the new building is progressing steadily. Several teams are working each day and advantage has been taken of the favorable weather the last few days to complete the excavation and leveling of the lot. Part of the lot is already below the line for the floor of the basement and it will be necessary to haul dirt to bring it up to the required level.

The trenches for the forms for the concrete foundation are being dug, but it is not probable that any concrete will be laid before the first of April. W. C. Staver, who has charge of the contract, said that no attempt would be made to put in any concrete until he was assured that it would not be frozen before it had set. However, the forms will be erected in the near future and will prevent the banks from caving in.

MINERS' WAGE SCALE TO BE MADE AT MOBILE FEB. 7

Operators and Delegates of Miners Will Meet in South to Decide on New Schedule.

By United Press.

Indianapolis, January 26—Operators and miner delegates representing the states of western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois will meet at Mobile, Ala., February 7 for their wage scale conference. President White announced before the United Mine Workers' convention today. This convention will extend into next week, he said. The original intention was to have the conference begin February 1, but the convention will hold the miner delegates here past that date.

Delegates representing 400,000 union coal miners decided by an overwhelming vote not to suspend work April first in case a new wage scale for miners has not been made by that time. It is now assured, delegates said, that wage scale negotiations will go on under peaceful terms until the operators have at least stated they will not grant the miners' demands. The miners appeared confident a satisfactory agreement will be reached.

ENGLAND MAKES TENTATIVE REPLY TO AMERICAN NOTE

United States Objects to British Seizure of Mails Consigned to Neutral Ports.

By United Press.

Washington, January 26—England has made a tentative reply to the American note protesting against seizure of mail between America and neutral countries. The state department today announced plans to make the American note and reply public Friday. The American note in protest is understood to have been based on the contention that Great Britain has no jurisdiction over first class mail bound for neutral countries. Under international law England has a right to censor all mail which is routed through a British port, but may not censor mail bound directly to a neutral port, but forced while enroute to enter a British port.

LAST PROPOSAL ON LUSITANIA CASE

Final Communication to Germany Handed to Ambassador Bernstorff Today.

TO BE TRANSMITTED AT ONCE

Arrangements Made so Ambassador Could Cable Message to Berlin Without Delay.

By United Press.

Washington, January 26.—Secretary of State Lansing today delivered to Count Bernstorff for transmission to Berlin the final proposal of the U. S. for settlement of the Lusitania case.

Ambassador Bernstorff was summoned to the state department shortly before noon. Lansing submitted the written proposal setting forth in unequivocal terms the position of the United States government that Germany must admit the illegality of the sinking of the Lusitania with the loss of more than one hundred American lives.

Arrangements were made that Ambassador Bernstorff should cable this communication immediately to his government. Nothing will be done until a reply comes from Berlin.

The German ambassador carried no communication with him when he went into Secretary Lansing's office. He had in his hand a card on which were a few written notes, presumably suggestions to be incorporated into the memorandum to be sent to Berlin. After his conference with Secretary Lansing, the ambassador dictated a letter to a state department's stenographer. It is presumed this was a message containing the United States demands. Count Bernstorff was closeted with Lansing for about thirty-five minutes.

"I'LL PROVE IT BY THE NEWSPAPER"

Every day you hear the newspaper referred to as a medium to settle some dispute.

It is an authority.

And in its advertising columns, too, it is Sir Oracle.

They form the public market place where buyers come and offer what they have to sell.

There is nothing else quite like them in this respect.

The advertising in this very newspaper today is typical of the business life of the community.

It is as interesting as it is authoritative and it is read and referred to by nearly all the readers of the newspaper.

CARNEGIE MEDALS ARE AWARDED TO SEVENTEEN BY HERO COMMISSION

Nine of Those Honored Lost Their Lives In Efforts to Save Others Who at the Time Were In Distress.

Widows of Men Killed Are Awarded $35 a Month For Life or Until They Remarry—Each Child $5 a Month.

AT the twelfth annual meeting of the Carnegie hero fund commission at Pittsburgh seventeen acts of heroism were recognized. Four silver and thirteen bronze medals were awarded.

Nine of the heroes lost their lives, and to the dependents of four of these pensions aggregating $1,920 a year were granted. To the dependents of four of the others who lost their lives sums totaling $3,000 were granted, to be applied in various ways, subject to the direction of the commission.

In addition to these money grants, in one case the sum of $28,000 was appropriated for educational purposes, and in six cases awards aggregating $4,500 were made for other purposes. Payments in these cases will not be made until the beneficiaries' plans for the use of the awards have been approved by the commission.

The statement of the cases of heroism as given by the commission follows in part:

J. Lamar McCann of Tuscaloosa, Ala., was awarded a bronze medal. McCann, aged twenty-three, a student, saved Mary T. Hunter, aged twenty-two, and attempted to save Rex E. Partin, aged thirty-four, from drowning at Tuscaloosa, Jan. 3, 1915. Partin and Miss Hunter fell from their canoe into the icy waters of the Warrior river, sixty feet from the bank. Miss Hunter grasped Partin, who was not a good swimmer, and pulled him beneath the surface. McCann, who was near in another canoe with a young woman, dived and swam about five feet to Partin's canoe. His companion used a stick and slowly paddled to the bank for help. McCann swung the end of Partin's canoe between Partin and Miss Hunter, and they grasped it. McCann supported Miss Hunter by reaching over the canoe and grasping her arms. Partin seemed to be demoralized. He tried twice to climb up on the canoe, and each time it went beneath the surface. He disappeared after the second attempt and was drowned. After being in the water about fifteen minutes McCann and Miss Hunter were taken to the bank by a man who came to the rescue in a boat. They had drifted until they were 150 feet above the overflow of the dam, where the drop was twenty feet. McCann wanted to remain in the water and dive for Partin. Miss Hunter was unconscious, but efforts to revive him were fruitless.

Heroic Attempt Fails.

The mother of Thomas McGrady of Fredonia, Kan., was given a bronze medal. McGrady died assisting in an attempt to save Robert M. Oliver and Edward J. Hetzel from drowning at Pittsburgh on Jan. 13, 1915. Oliver and Hetzel were rowing on the Monongahela river. Their boat was swept against the upper end of a fleet of anchored barges. McGrady, who had but one leg, and another man entered a yawl and rowed more than 700 feet to the scene. Oliver stepped into their boat and sat down. McGrady and his companion then rowed hard and reached point thirty feet upstream from Hetzel. They lost control of the boat, and the current then swept it broadside against the barges. All three men were drowned.

The father of William F. Niehaus, Jr., deceased, of Evansville, Ind., was awarded a bronze medal. Niehaus died assisting in the attempt to save Robert M. Oliver and Edward J. Hetzel. Niehaus accompanied McGrady to the rescue and lost his life.

The widow of Horace M. Parham of Austell, Ga., was awarded a bronze medal and $40 a month for support during her life or until she remarries. Parham, a farmer, died attempting to save Thomas Johnson from suffocation at Mableton, Ga., on Aug. 10, 1914. Johnson was overcome by noxious gases in a well thirty-five feet deep.

Henry H. Rogers of Austell, Ga., was awarded a bronze medal. Rogers saved Edward Johnson in the accident in which Parham lost his life.

William Pratt of Austell, Ga., was also awarded a bronze medal for attempting to save Parham.

The widow of Andrew J. Atkinson of Vontay, Va., was awarded a bronze medal and $30 a month for support during her life or until she remarries, with $5 a month additional for her daughter until she reaches the age of sixteen. Atkinson died attempting to save William S. Johnson, aged twelve, from drowning at Glimerton, Va., on Aug. 4, 1915.

The widow of C. Gilbert Danner of Fort Worth, Tex., was awarded a bronze medal and $30 a month for life or until she remarries. Danner fell through the opening in the street curb into a chamber which gave entrance to the shaft of a sewer. From the chamber Isaac slid over into the shaft and fell to the bottom of the sewer, which was nineteen feet below the street level. Burn had been turned only a few times. Buskuhl fell unconscious to the bottom. He was removed fifteen minutes later, but remained unconscious for two days and was disabled for more than five months. Parke died as he was taken from the well.

John P. Burn of Atlanta, Ga., was awarded a bronze medal. Burn, aged thirty-six, an engraver, saved Isaac Janke, aged three, from drowning on May 12, 1913. Isaac fell through the opening in the street curb into a chamber which gave entrance to the shaft of a sewer. From the chamber Isaac slid over into the shaft and fell to the bottom of the sewer, which was nineteen feet below the street level. Burn, who knew nothing about the sewer, entered, crawled over into the shaft and descended. He spread his feet and got a bearing on the bottom and sides of the sewer and followed the course of the water ten feet to where he found Isaac. He was not seriously injured.

Harold W. Snow of Chicago was awarded a silver medal. Snow attempted to save Mollie Meredith, aged seventy-three, from being killed by a train at Jackson, Miss., on April 26, 1912.

The father of F. Lawrence Bryne, deceased, of Philadelphia, was awarded a silver medal. Bryne, aged eighteen, schoolboy, died attempting to save William S. Ward, aged twelve, from drowning on May 21, 1915.

The widow of William D. Bard, Sr., of Little Rock, Ark., was awarded a silver medal and $35 a month for support during her life or until she remarries, with $5 a month additional for each of three children until each reaches the age of sixteen. Bard, an aged wire chief, died attempting to save Elsie Busick, aged sixteen, from drowning at Benton, Ark., on July 11, 1915.

William S. Turner of Seaside Park, N. J., was awarded a bronze medal. Turner saved George S. Lewis from drowning at Avalon, N. J., on Aug. 15, 1914. Lewis and Turner swam in the Atlantic ocean to a point 300 feet from shore, and then Lewis became distressed in deep water. Turner swam to Lewis and tried to push him shoreward, but Lewis turned and grasped him at the shoulders with both hands. Lewis pushed Turner beneath the surface, and then Turner shook himself free. Turner tried to swim toward shore with Lewis, but because of an undertow made no progress. Turner went beneath the surface once or twice more and called to persons on shore to come out with buoy. Lewis was very weak. Turner left him and swam hard for a distance of about 125 feet and then waded to shore. He was frightened by Lewis' condition and was weak from his exertions, and his legs trembled as he waded. He ran 500 feet, got a buoy and returned to the water. He asked a man to go out for Lewis and explained that he was

Student Preachers Lead the List of Self Supporting Students—Employment Bureau.

By United Press.

Greencastle, January 26—Nearly one-half of the men attending DePauw university are earning at least part of their way through school. Before the school year closes they will have earned approximately $22,127.50.

This is a substance of a report just issued by Chairman Daniel Lavenood of the employment bureau of the college Y. M. C. A. The report contained a complete survey of the labor situation at DePauw. Out of 341 men enrolled at the university, says the report, 151, or 44.3 per cent, are earning at least a part of their expenses in school.

Student preachers head the list of self-supporting students, and the amount they earn per capita also is the largest. Eighteen preachers are earning an average of $561 per year. There are 57 waiters earning an average of $64.74; ten stewards averaging $144.60; eight dishwashers averaging $105.75; seven clerks, averaging $117.14; six bellboys averaging $119.66; four newspaper carriers averaging $101; two librarians averaging $128; four stenographers averaging $52.50; three newspaper reporters averaging $81; and thirteen doing odd jobs and averaging $74.31.

The general average is $127.90 per year. Stenographers get the smallest pay of all, $52.50. Several lines of activity are not listed. One student often runs the movie machine at a local theatre and others are engaged in collecting laundry.

A similar report on the amounts spent by various college students is being prepared.

Advertising as an Economic Force.

Advertising as an economic force was discussed by Carl Hunt, editor of Associated Advertising, in a paper he read at the meeting of the Century Club at the Metropolitan School of Music Building at Indianapolis.

"In discussing the relation between advertising and the cost of living," said Mr. Hunt, "two questions, quite distinct and quite different, might be asked.

"First, we might ask, Has advertising increased the cost of the individual article or service advertised? and the answer to that would be emphatically negative.

"Second, Has advertising increased the cost of living or has it helped to do so?"

"Advertising has decreased selling prices, quality considered, by reducing selling costs, by bringing about quantity production with the attending economies and in other ways.

"Advertising has raised standards, so that we lose less through the buying of shoddy goods.

"Advertising has saved our time by directing us to the best places to find what we require and has further saved our time by teaching us to rely on the seller and his sincere desire to serve us, so that we need not take time to barter, but may with safety buy more quickly."

Gums shrinking? Danger ahead!

Go now to a mirror and examine your mouth? Do your gums look "rinsed out," shrunken? Do you see a jagged appearance in the gum-line?

If so, see your dentist. He will tell you that you have pyorrhea, and that to save your teeth you will have to fight this dread disease at once.

From pyorrhea come by far the greater part of all tooth troubles. Unless treated and checked, it will result not only in the shrinking and malformation of your gums and of the bony structure into which your teeth are set, but in the loss of the teeth themselves.

A specific for pyorrhea has been discovered recently by dental science, and is now offered for daily treatment in Senreco Tooth Paste. Senreco combats the germ of the disease. Its regular use insures your teeth against the attack or further progress of pyorrhea.

LUSITANIA CASE REMAINS OPEN

Germany Fails to Meet the Demands of U. S.

UPHOLD UNDERSEA WARFARE

Unwilling to Admit That Course of Submarine Warfare Is Illegal, But Is Willing to Pay Indemnity as An Act of Grace.

Washington, Jan. 26.—Germany has again failed in express terms to meet the demands of the United States for a settlement of the Lusitania controversy.

Count von Bernstorff was so informed at a conference which he had with Secretary Lansing. While the ambassador expects to confer again with the secretary, it is not now expected that anything approaching a definite understanding can be reached until after the embassy has received further instructions from Berlin.

Though the latest exchange of views has failed to bring about a settlement between the two governments, at the state department and at the embassy confidence was expressed that a basis of settlement would be reached in the near future.

It was learned that the stumbling block consists in the unwillingness of the German government to admit that the course of her submarine warfare at the time the Lusitania was destroyed was illegal. Though willing to pay the United States indemnity for the lives of the Americans who were lost, the German government wishes to pay this indemnity as an act of grace rather than upon any admission of wrong doing.

To admit that the attack on the Lusitania was illegal, the German government contends, would involve an admission that the entire submarine campaign launched against British shipping as a reprisal was illegal. It also would be tantamount, it is contended, to an admission in toto of the claims of the American government that a neutral citizen surrenders none of his rights by traveling through a war zone on merchant ships of a belligerent power.

To this view the United States has refused absolutely to defer. Its position in this respect has not altered one iota since the beginning of the confidential negotiations between the ambassador and the secretary of state. From the first, Secretary Lansing has insisted that Germany should admit the illegality of the act and make amends accordingly.

Time and again Count von Bernstorff, it is said, has submitted the proposition to his government in varying forms, but each time the secretary has detected an effort to avoid the satisfaction demands; though with each successive discussion the ambassador has come nearer to meeting the demands.

On less essential points, it was learned, the German government has made concessions. She has consented to eliminate from the discussion the fact that prior to the sailing of the Lusitania on her fatal trip, the German embassy, through advertisements in the New York papers and by personal messages, advised the Americans in the passenger list not to sail on the steamer.

U. S. MAY FACE WAR DECLARES MANN

Hints Great Briton Will Be Nation's Foe.

Washington, Jan. 26.—Representative Mann of Illinois, the Republican leader, in the course of a speech in the house expressed the opinion that the United States is likely to be called to defend itself at the close of the present war. He urged congress to make large appropriations for the army and navy and enact legislation which will enable American industry to supply all the government needs in the event of war.

Mr. Mann, who has heretofore opposed increased armaments, spoke with great deliberation and as he urged that the question of national defense be treated in a non-partisan way he was applauded by members of the house.

Mr. Mann startled some members when he declared that war with Great Britain was more likely than a struggle with Germany.

"We can better afford," said Mr. Mann, "to spend hundreds of millions of dollars or a few billions of dollars in ample preparation for trouble and avoid it, if possible, than we can to await trouble and then spend untold billions before we are finally victorious, as we would be."

Mr. Mann dwelt with emphasis on his argument that the government should mobilize its industrial resources against the possible time of trouble. He said it was the duty of congress to enact, without delay, legislation that would establish industries on a basis that would make this country absolutely independent for all supplies in case it should ever be called to defend itself.

HEAVY BLOW IS GIVEN BRITISH

Turks Win Decisive Victory to Relief Army.

MONASTIR IS DOMBARDED

Squadron of French Aeroplanes Attack Southern Servian Towns Held by Teutonic Allies—Germans Bombard Nancy, Killing Six Persons.

London, Jan. 26.—A decisive Turk victory over the British forces under General Aylmer, after a six-hour battle on both banks of the Tigris, east of Kut-El-Amara, the British goal, was announced officially by Constantinople. The battle took place in the Essian region, six miles east of Kut-El-Amara, where the main British force which General Aylmer is trying to relieve, has been bottled up by the Turks since the first week of January. The British were driven several miles further to the east and their losses were so heavy that a one day's truce was asked by their commander to bury his dead. The Turkish war office gives the number of British killed at 3,000.

Berlin quoted a Constantinople report to the effect that General Townshend's forces "evidently lacking ammunition" had attempted no further sorties. Turkish and German reports insist that the lack of supplies and provisions, especially of water, is growing ominously at Kut-El-Amara, and predict an early surrender. Meanwhile the floods, rains and hurricanes are hampering the operations of the relief force, making artillery attacks practically impossible.

The unification by the Turkish and German staffs of the three great campaigns in Asia under the personal direction of Field Marshal von Der Goltz is announced in a Rome dispatch.

The Berlin Overseas News agency announces on the strength of advices from Persia, that Naib Hussain Khan, a prominent Persian leader, and his son, have joined the native volunteers, numbering about 4,000 men, and attacked the Russians near Sare. They took a number of prisoners, two machine guns and a quantity of ammunition.

Monastir and Gievigli, southern Servian towns held by the Teutonic allies, have been attacked again by a squadron of French aeroplanes. Bombardment of Nancy, France, by the Germans has been renewed.

On the other principal fronts the great bulk of the armed millions remains inactive, with only aerial battles, big gun bombardments and occasional thrusts with small forces of infantry to break the monotony of the deadlock.

The French aerial raid was made by a squad of sixteen aeroplanes, some of which traveled 190 miles to attack the Teutonic defenses along the southern border of Servia. It is estimated officially that 100 persons were killed or wounded at Gievigli. All the French machines returned safely.

The bombardment of Nancy was carried on by German guns of long range, as was the case early this month, when for three days fifteen inch projectiles were hurled into the city, killing six persons and wounding ten.

The remnants of Montenegro's troops, driven from their own land, are falling back through Albania, fighting as they go. Apparently the main Montenegrin army as an organized unit has ceased to exist, for the cable reports speak of the present hostilities as guerrilla warfare.

WILSON PLANS TARIFF BOARD

Will Ask Congress to Create New Commission.

CONDITIONS UNUSUAL NOW

Body Would Investigate Every Phase of the Customs and Tariff Laws In Their Economic Effort and Their Administrative Methods.

Washington, Jan. 26.—President Wilson has requested Majority Leader Kitchin of the house, to take up with the ways and means committee immediately the matter of formulating a law creating a tariff board. In a long conference with the majority leader, President Wilson set forth at length his views as to why the creation of a tariff board is advisable as a means of enabling the United States to cope with the new industrial conditions to be created by the war.

Mr. Kitchin offered no objection to the proposal and after his conference with the president he expressed the belief that the ways and means committee would report a tariff commission bill in four or five weeks.

The situation of the entire world is so unusual as regards industrial, as well as political developments, the president declared, and the interest of the American people in the outcome of these new conditions, is vital and that it is mandatory that the government of the United States adopt every means to prepare itself.

The functions of the proposed board to be prescribed by the administration are:

Investigation of the administrative and fiscal effect of customs laws heretofore enacted, or to be enacted in the future.

Investigation of the relation between rates on raw material and those on finished or half finished products.

Investigation of the effects of ad valorem and specific duties and of those which are a compound of ad valorem and specific duties.

The arrangement of schedules of duties and the classification of articles in the several schedules.

The study of provisions of law and the rules and regulations of the treasury department regarding entry, appraisement, invoices and collections.

In general, to investigate the working of the customs and tariff laws in economic effect and administrative methods.

It should be the duty of the board, the president believes, to throw light from every possible angle upon the tariff relations between the United States and foreign countries, the rates of duties imposed on American products in those countries with the extent and effect of discriminating duties, commercial treaties and preferential provisions, the effects of export bounties and preferential transportation rates and of any special or discriminatory duties that may be levied by the United States. The board would be entrusted with the power of investigating the industrial effects of proposed and existing duties on products from abroad, competing with the products of American industries.

It would inquire into the conditions of competition surrounding the production of all commodities sold in the United States and abroad.

An important matter which the board would be called on to look into without delay would be the possibility of establishing new industries in the United States and expanding industries already in existence by what the president is pleased to refer to as the necessity of enacting the measure.

Great Britain to Register Women as Farm Laborers.

London, Jan. 26.—Great Britain must have woman farmers if the country is to survive the war. That is the dictum just issued by Lord Selborne, president of the government board of agriculture.

A proposition is under consideration to canvass the rural districts of England, Scotland and Wales and register women farm laborers, just as male workers were listed under the registration act.

The board of agriculture takes the view that the increased demands of munitions plants and the conscription bill will drain the farming districts of the available men and unless their places are taken by women the United Kingdom will suffer a serious food shortage.

Ferry Boats Crash.

HOUSE OF LORDS PASS COMPELSSION MEASURE

Speakers Declare Bill Does Not Go Far Enough.

London, Jan. 26.—The house of lords, without division, passed the second reading of the military bill. The Marquis of Lansdowne, minister without portfolio, spoke strongly of the necessity of enacting the measure.

Earl Curzon, lord of the privy seal, in concluding the debate, expressed the opinion that the most serious criticism of the bill was made by those who contended that it did not go far enough. No one would like better to see a permanent measure passed than himself, but obviously it was out of the question to attempt to revolutionize the whole military system in the middle of a great war and force upon the country a general system of compulsion.

Earl Derby, director of recruiting, said he was convinced that the bill when imposed on the country would not make the disturbance in industrial circles that many had predicted. He believed it would be so worked that men could be brought into the army as required and as industry could spare them. He was more frightened by the extent of the exemptions granted by the government than by the reductions in men available for military service made by the munitions tribunals.

Since his report was made four lists of reserved occupations had been issued, and he could not help being apprehensive when he learned that no less than 100,000 badges exempting men from military service had been issued in four days last week.

CHAPTER XXI.

In the Name of the Law.

MAGEE'S eyes strayed to where the two victims of the dead man's falsehood whispered together in the shadows, and he wondered at the calmness with which Kendrick had greeted Hayden in the room above.

"When Kendrick arrived," Professor Bolton went on, "first of all he consulted his old friend Drayton. Drayton informed him that he had nothing to fear should his misstep be made public, for in reality there was at this late day no crime committed in the eyes of the law. He also told Kendrick how matters stood, and of the net he was spreading for Hayden. He had some fears, he said, about sending a man of my years alone to Balldate inn. Kendrick begged for the chance to come too. So, without making his return known in Reuton, three nights ago he accompanied me here. Three nights—it seems years. I had secured keys for us both from John Bentley. As we climbed the mountain I noticed your light, and we agreed it would be best if only one of us revealed ourselves to the intruders in the inn. So Kendrick let himself in by a side door while I engaged you and Bland in the office. He spent the night on the third floor. In the morning I told the whole affair to Quimby, knowing his interest in both Hayden and Kendrick, and secured for Kendrick the key to the annex. Almost as soon as I arrived—

"You state it vividly and with truth," Professor Bolton replied. "Night before last the ordinance numbered 45 was due to pass the council. It was arranged that when it did, Hayden, through his man Rutter, or personally, would telephone the combination of the safe to the mayor of Reuton. Cargan and Bland sat in the office watching for the flash of light at the telephone switchboard, while you and I were Max's prisoners above. Something went wrong. Hayden heard that the courts would issue an injunction making ordinance No. 45 worthless. So, although the council obeyed Cargan's instructions and passed the bill, Hayden refused to give the mayor the combination."

"Then melodrama began in dead earnest," he continued. "I have always been a man of peace, and the wild scuffle that claimed me for one of its leading actors from that moment will remain in my memory as long as I live. Cargan dynamited the safe. Kendrick held him up. You held up Hayden. I peeked through your window and saw you place the package of money under a brick in your fireplace."

"You—the curtains were down," interrupted Magee.

"I found a half inch of open space," explained the old man. "Yes, I actually lay on my stomach in the snow and watched you. In the morning for the first time in my life I committed robbery. My punishment was swift and sure. Bland swooped down upon me. Again this afternoon I came upon the precious package, after a long search, in the hands of the hermit of Balldate. I thought we were safe at last when I handed the package to Kendrick in my room tonight, but I had not counted on the wild things a youth like you will do for love of a designing maid."

"No," said Mr. Magee, answering aloud his own question. "You are wrong, sir. I do not know just what the motives of Miss Norton were in desiring this money, but I will stake my reputation as an honest holdup man that they were perfectly all right."

"Perhaps," replied the other, quite unconvinced. "But what honest motive could she have? I am able to assign her no role in this little drama!"

"Pardon me," broke in Magee, "but would you mind telling me why Miss Thornhill came up to Balldate to join in the chase for the package?"

"Her motive," replied the professor, "does her great credit. For several years her father, Henry Thornhill, has been forced through illness to leave the management of the railway's affairs to his vice president, Hayden. Late yesterday the old man heard of this proposed bribe—on his sick bed. He was very nearly insane at the thought of the disgrace it would bring upon him. He tried to rise himself and prevent the passing of the package. His daughter, a brave, loyal girl, herself undertook the task."

"Then," said Mr. Magee, "Miss Thornhill is not distressed at the loss of the most important evidence in the case."

"I have explained the matter to her," returned Professor Bolton. "There is no chance whatever that her father's name will be implicated."

"Did Miss Thornhill and Kendrick meet for the first time after his exile upstairs—in No. 7?" Mr. Magee wanted to know.

"Yes," answered Professor Bolton. "In one of his letters long ago Hayden told Kendrick he was engaged to the girl. It was the last letter Kendrick received from him."

There was a pause.

"The important point now," the old man went on, "is the identity of this girl to whom you have made your princely gift out of the goodness of your young heart. I propose to speak to the woman she has introduced as her mother and elicit what information I can."

He crossed the floor, followed by Mr. Magee, and stood by the woman's chair. She looked up, her eyes heavy with sleep, her appearance more tawdry than ever in that faint light.

"Madam," remarked the professor, with the air of a judge trying a case, "your daughter has tonight made her escape from this place with a large sum of money earnestly desired by the prosecuting attorney of Reuton county. In the name of the law I command you to tell me her destination and what she proposes to do with that package of greenbacks."

The woman blinked stupidly in the dusk.

"She ain't my daughter," she replied, and Mr. Magee's heart leaped up. "I can tell you that much. I keep a boarding house in Reuton, and Miss—the girl you speak about—has been my boarder for three years. She brought me up here as a sort of chaperon, though I don't see as I'm old enough for that yet. You don't get nothing else out of me, except that she is a perfectly lovely young woman, and your money couldn't be safer with the president of the United States."

Mr. Magee could have embraced this faded woman for her news. He looked at his watch. It was 12:20.

"The siege is over!" he cried. "I shall not attempt to direct your actions any longer. Mr. Peters, will you please go down to the village and bring back Mr. Quimby and—the coroner?"

"The coroner!" The mayor of Reuton jumped to his feet. "I don't want to be in on any inquest scene. Come on, Max, let's get out of here."

"I'm no longer your jailer," Magee said. "Professor, these gentlemen are your witnesses. Do you wish to detain them?"

"See here," cried the mayor angrily, "there ain't no question but that you can find me in Reuton any time you want me at the little room on Main street. Anybody can tell you my hours. The door's always open to any reformer that has the nerve to climb the stairs. Look me up there. I'll make it interesting for you."

"I certainly shall," the professor replied, "and very soon. Until then you may go when and where you please."

"Thanks!" sneered the mayor. "I'll expect you. I'll be ready. I've had to get ready to answer your kind before. You think you got me, eh? Well, you're a fool to think that. As for Drayton, the pup, the yellow streaked pup, I'll talk to Mr. Drayton when I get back to Reuton."

"Before you go, Bland," remarked Magee, smiling. "I want to ask about Arabella. Where did you get her?"

"Some of it happened to a friend of mine," the ex-haberdasher answered, "a friend that keeps a clothing store. I got this suit there. I changed the story here and there."

Mr. Magee laughed, but over the long lean face of Bland not the ghost of a smile flitted. He was frightened through and through.

"You're a fine bunch," sneered Mr. Max. "Reformers, eh? Well, you'll get what the rest of 'em always got. We'll tie you up in knots and leave you on the doorstep of some orphan asylum before we're through with you."

"Come on, Lou," said Cargan. "Drayton's a smart guy. Doc. Where's his proof? Elopement with the bundle of dry goods this young man's taken a fancy to. And even if he had the money—I've been up against this many a time. You're wasting your talents. Doc. Good night! Come on, boys."

Mr. Magee turned back from the window to the dim interior of the hotel office. He who had come to Balldate inn to court loneliness had never felt so lonely in his life, for he had lost sight of her—in the great Reuton station of his imagination she had slipped from his dreams—to go where he could not follow, even in thought.

Selecting a log of the hermit's cutting from the stock beside the hearth, Mr. Magee tossed it on the fire. There followed a shower of sparks and a flood of red light in the room. Through this light Kendrick advanced to Magee's side, and the first of the Balldate hermits saw that the man's face was lined by care, that his eyes were tired even under the new light in them, that his mouth was twisted bitterly.

"Poor devil," thought Magee.

Kendrick drew up chairs for himself and Magee and they sat down. Behind them the bulky Mrs. Norton dozed, dreaming perhaps of her Reuton boarding house, while Miss Thornhill and the professor talked intermittently in low tones. The ranks at Balldate were thinning rapidly; before long the place must settle back with a sigh in the cold to wait for its first summer girl.

"Mr. Magee," said Kendrick nervously, "you have become involved in an unkind, a tragic story. I do not mean the affair of the bribe—I refer to the matter between Hayden and myself."

"If you had rather not"—began Magee.

"No," replied Kendrick, "I prefer that you should know. It was you who took the pistol from his hand. I do not believe that even I can tell you all that was in Hayden's mind when he went into that other room and closed the door. It seems to me preposterous that a man of his sort should take his life under the circumstances. I feel somehow that there is a part of the story even I do not know. But let that be."

He bowed his head in his hands.

"Ever since I came into this room," he went on, "the eyes of a pompous little man have been following me about. They have constantly recalled to me the nightmare of my life. You have noticed, no doubt, the pictures of the admiral that decorate these walls?"

"I have," replied Magee. He gazed curiously at the nearest of the portraits. How persistently this almost mythical starched man wove in and out of the melodrama at Balldate inn.

"Well," continued Kendrick, "the admiral's eyes haunt me. Perhaps you know that he plays a game—a game of solitaire. I have good reason to remember that game. It is a silly inconsequential game. You would scarcely believe that it once sent a man to hell."

He stopped.

"I am beginning in the middle of my story," he apologized. "Let me go back. Six years ago I was hardly the man you see now—I was at least twenty years younger. Hayden and I worked together in the office of the Suburban railway. We had been close friends at college. I believed in him and trusted him, although I knew he had certain weaknesses. I was a happy man. I had risen rapidly. I was young. The future was lying golden before me and I was engaged. The daughter of Henry Thornhill, our employer—the girl you have met here at Balldate—had promised to be my wife. Hayden had also been a suitor, but when our engagement was announced he came to me like a man, and I thought his words were sincere.

"One day Hayden told me of a chance we might take which would make us rich. It was not altogether within the law, but it was the sort of thing that other men were doing constantly, and Hayden assured me that as he had arranged matters it was absolutely safe. My great sin is that I agreed we should take the chance, a sin for which I have paid, Mr. Magee.

"The coroner!" The mayor of Reuton jumped to his feet. "I don't want to be in on any inquest scene. Come on, Max, let's get out of here."

"I'm no longer your jailer," Magee said. "Professor, these gentlemen are your witnesses. Do you wish to detain them?"

"See here," cried the mayor angrily, "there ain't no question but that you can find me in Reuton any time you want me at the little room on Main street. Anybody can tell you my hours. The door's always open to any reformer that has the nerve to climb the stairs. Look me up there. I'll make it interesting for you."

"I certainly shall," the professor replied, "and very soon. Until then you may go when and where you please."

"Thanks!" sneered the mayor. "I'll expect you. I'll be ready. I've had to get ready to answer your kind before. You think you got me, eh? Well, you're a fool to think that. As for Drayton, the pup, the yellow streaked pup, I'll talk to Mr. Drayton when I get back to Reuton."

"Before you go, Bland," remarked Magee, smiling. "I want to ask about Arabella. Where did you get her?"

"Some of it happened to a friend of mine," the ex-haberdasher answered, "a friend that keeps a clothing store. I got this suit there. I changed the story here and there."

Mr. Magee laughed, but over the long lean face of Bland not the ghost of a smile flitted. He was frightened through and through.

"You're a fine bunch," sneered Mr. Max. "Reformers, eh? Well, you'll get what the rest of 'em always got. We'll tie you up in knots and leave you on the doorstep of some orphan asylum before we're through with you."

"Come on, Lou," said Cargan. "Drayton's a smart guy. Doc. Where's his proof? Elopement with the bundle of dry goods this young man's taken a fancy to. And even if he had the money—I've been up against this many a time. You're wasting your talents. Doc. Good night! Come on, boys."

Mr. Magee turned back from the window to the dim interior of the hotel office. He who had come to Balldate inn to court loneliness had never felt so lonely in his life, for he had lost sight of her—in the great Reuton station of his imagination she had slipped from his dreams—to go where he could not follow, even in thought.

"Hayden told me he had thought the matter over carefully. There was nothing to do but to clear out of Reuton forever. But why, he argued, should we both go? Why wreck two lives? It would be far better, he told me, for one to assume the guilt of both and go away.

"I agreed to his plan. Hayden led the way into the room where the admiral had been playing. We went up to the table, over which the green shaded light still burned. On it lay two decks of cards, face up. Hayden picked up the nearest deck and shuffled it nervously. His face—God, it was like the snow out there on the mountain!"

"He held out the deck," went on the exile softly, "told me to draw. He said if the card was black he'd clear out. 'But if it's red, David,' he said, 'why you—got to go.' I held my breath and drew. It was a full minute before I dared look at the card in my hand. Then I turned it over, and it was—red—measly little red two spot. I don't suppose a man ever realizes all at once what such a moment means. I remember that I was much cooler than Hayden. It was I who had to brace him up. I—I even tried to joke with him. But his face was like death. He hardly spoke at all at first, and then suddenly he became horribly talkative. I left him—talking wildly—I left Reuton. I left the girl to whom I was engaged."

KENTUCKY KILLS DRY VOTE

Bill to Submit Prohibition Amendment to the People Defeated.

Frankfort, Ky., Jan. 26.—Prohibition as a political issue is dead in Kentucky for another two years at least. By a vote of 20 to 14 the state senate defeated the Frost bill, which carried a constitutional amendment putting state-wide prohibition issue before the people for a vote.

The drys were not ready for the question and wished to defer action on the measure a day, but the wets were ready and forced the issue.

Three-fifths of the bonded spirits and whiskies in the United States are in Kentucky warehouses, according to estimates attributed to official sources.

BASIS FOR WAGE DEMANDS

Railroad Men Argue Frenzied Finance Has Kept Pay Down.

New York, Jan. 26.—The chief points which the railroad labor leaders are going to make, if the members of their unions vote approval of their proposal to make an eight-hour demand upon the 443 railroads of this country, have been learned. They are:

That if it had not been for financial mismanagement in the last ten years and the issuance of securities for which no value was received, the net earnings of the railroads, now with business picking up fast, would be sufficient to pay their employees on an eight-hour basis and have vast sums over to put into improvements.

THE "ONE HUNDRED DAYS" MOVEMENT.

Meanwhile, throughout the activities of the treasonable secret associations in Indiana, the state continued to send troops to the front. In 1864 when Union generals wanted all available troops for pushing the war to a conclusion, thousands of veteran soldiers were doing garrison duty in the North. To relieve them for active service, Morton conceived the idea of enlisting new men who could do the garrison duty. Calling upon governors of Illinois, Ohio, Wisconsin and Iowa to act with him, they united in offering Lincoln 85,000 men from these states for a term of one hundred days. Indiana furnished her share, many of the one hundred day men re-enlisting in answer to the last appeals for volunteers.

The re-dedication of the Scipio Bethel Presbyterian church, the Rev. W. D. Coe, pastor, was held on Sunday, January 23rd, 1916, in an all-day service. The services were well attended and highly successful. The W. C. Cole, is conducting evangelistic re-dedication services following the dedicatory by a former pastor, the Rev. John Glenn, of Lockland, Ohio. It was a week of prayer meetings conducted splendid sermon and most fitting for the session.

Perisopic Paragraphs

There are some people who imagine that being able to throw a few French phrases into their conversation or letter writing leaves no doubt concerning their finished education.

Which reminds us of the story told on Andrew Jackson while campaigning in Tennessee. His opponent for the office had spoken to the same crowd immediately preceding Jackson's appearance, and had awed his listeners with his display of intelligence by inserting several Latin phrases. Andy could evoke no enthusiasm whatever with his crude every-day English. Toward the latter part of his speech, while pausing for a drink of water, one of his advisors whispered in his ear, "give 'em some Latin, Andy, they like it." And Old Hickory, with his handkerchief flapping in the breeze and a stern look of resolution on his face, advanced to the edge of the platform and shouted: "E. Pluribus Unum! Habeas Corpus! Sic Semper Tyrannis!" and the audience went wild with enthusiasm.

Garden Fever.

This is the time of the year that garden fever, one of the earliest of the Spring diseases, makes its appearance, and several cases have been reported in the city. It is usually caused by germs carried in garden seed catalogues, and, while not necessarily serious, it is very infectious, and causes the patient much inconvenience, not to mention mental exhaustion from figuring up the visionary profits. The patient, after going through the catalogue, becomes restless and impatient to get out in the back yard and go to spading. In the advanced stages of the fever the sufferer becomes delirious, seeing visions of monstrous tomatoes, beets, potatoes, onions, etc., and seeds of green beans, peas, radishes, lettuce, etc. He figures up just how much it will take to do the family, and gets dizzy calculating the profits on the balance. He sees financial independence, a summer vacation and possibly a trip to Europe ahead of him. If the seed catalogue, with his highly colored pictures, can be kept away from him until gardening time arrives, there is some hope, but a glimpse of it always causes a relapse. The disease usually disappears with the coming of Spring, when the desire to take an afternoon off and go fishing may be taken as an infallible sign that the patient has completely recovered.

A feeling of unity and harmony prevailed throughout the work of remodeling, leaving the church with its splendid building ready to face its new career with a united and harmonious congregation and pastor.

Rev. F. C. Hood, D. D., synodical evangelist assisting the pastor, Rev. W. C. Cole, is conducting evangelistic re-dedication services following the dedicatory by a former pastor, the Rev. John Glenn, of Lockland, Ohio. It was a week of prayer meetings conducted
